Raphael undertook the difficult task of transferring to the stage this elusive and supernatural work of Du Maurier, who would probably have been even more astonished to learn of its appearance on the stage than he was of the success of "Trilby." The problem of making a drama out of that work, however, was slight in comparison with the task that confronted the dramatist of "Peter Ibbetson."

Collier played the Duchess of Towers, while John Barrymore was the hero, and his brother Lionel, acting with him for the first time in years, was the colonel. The divisions of the play were Mrs. Deane's house in Hopshire, the Tete Noire Inn at Passy, the home of Col. Ibbetson in London, a cell at Newgate, and finally a cell in the jail at Lare d'Auteuil. The dreams in the second and fourth acts took piace in the old garden at Bassy where Peter's youth was passed. Tremendous Offensian Brought On by "L'Original Paginace".

Skill in Playwrighting.

Despite the difficulties in the task the excellent adapter with the assistance of Clifford Brooke, who also assisted in the original production at His Majesty's Theatre, London, has succeeded in making the supernatural convincing. It is, to borrow, a phrese from Carlyla.

ing the supernatural convincing. It is, to borrow a phrase from Carlyle, a sort of natural supernaturalism at least.

The first presentation here of the play gives occasion to the thought that Du Maurier with his supernaturalism is not really so imaginative and fanciful as he may seem, and perhaps is really in advance of even these modern and scientific times with "dream true" fantasy. There is an earnestness about his supernaturalism which convinces one that his belief in it was not merely for fiction purposes alone. His apparent sincerity is one of the most charming features of this play. His belief in a dream world is as vital as that of Chesfream world is as vital as that of Chesterton.

Aside from this interesting element the play is a fragrant bit of mid-Victorian sentiment, which by contrast with many of the modern plays is entirely refreshing. The costumes of the period were frightfully impractical, perhaps even more so than the styles of to-day, but there is an undeniable charm about them and it is almost possible to forgive Col. Ibbetson for the terribly bad taste of the furnishings in his study, because after all they were characteristically a part of that period.

Needless Reliteration.

Miss Farrar, star of the opera and the movies, was the delineator of the way-ward gypsy and Mr. Martinelli enacted the unfortunate Don Jose, who went to his destruction for the sake of her shifting smiles.

Needless Reiteration.

The machinery of the play itself some imes was as apparent as the machinery of the fly loft last night, which frequently falled to work. There seemed to be frequent and needless reiteration—it was so evident at times that the ground patent always that the characters were

STORMS OPERA

Offensive Brought On by "L'Oracolo" and "Pagliacci."

Little Italy executed a tremendous offensive last night. The point of attack was the Metropolitan Opera House and the battle raged chiefly on the Broadway front and the Fortieth street flank. The strategy of General Manager GattiCasazza, which brought on the attack, was the final presentation for the season of a double bill consisting of Leoni's opera "L'Oracolo" and Leoncavallo's
"Pagilacci."

The latter was the kernel of the situa-

I'm going to get the least bit technical to tell you that it is the "overload capacity" of the mechan cal parts, lubricating and cooling systems—an exclusive feature of Hupmobile motor construction—that makes Hupmobiles perform so phenomenally. This simple four cylinder motor has greater power, smoothness and speed than many multi's. Owners rate it just one per cent. short of perfection.

The Hupmobile is a "real" big car-119-inch wheelbase for the 5-passenger-has extra long underslung, semi-elliptic springs, scientifically placed to absorb road shock with a minimum of rebound. Deep upholstery, stuffed with real curled hair, pads every seat and seat back. There's stretching room for the longest of us in the tonneau. Wide doors, rightly tipped seats, everything you have to touch well within reach, and everything you have to see in plain sight-these are comfort features. And a new glory is added in this new Hupmobile-th glory of good looks. Ride in it-drive it yourself-you can sell yourself a Hup as well as we can.
